MEN OF LETTER -The persecution and poverty that were endured by men of letters, in the earlier ages of the world, are now comparatively unknown. Since the invention of the printing press, keewledge has become almost universal. The intelligence of the whole world is daily disseminated to the comparative transfer of the comparative transfer of the printing of the comparative transfer of the printing of the comparative transfer of the c gence of the whole world in daily disseminated through the newspapers. Art no longer languishes in obscurity, science is sown broadcast, and the genius of invention is everywhere trismphant. The man of genius who rests secure in a colu-webbed garret, singing his songs alone with the starr, may have a world-wide reputation.
